

THE DOUBLE MURDER

A ROMANCE UNDERLIES THE MURDER IN A VIENNA TRAIN.

Love and Devotion—An Innocent Man Goes to Jail to Shield a Woman.

The mysterious murder of the two bank cashiers while in a first-class carriage on the Vienna train is the absorbing topic of conversation to-day. In its details and in the general atmosphere of romance that surrounds it, it reminds many English readers of the startling incidents narrated in the well-known novel, "The Man from Seeland Yard."

The victims upon this occasion were two trusted employees of a Warsaw bank and they had been dispatched with 55,000 roubles (about $33,000) on a special and secret errand to a distant city. The reason for the secret, with a sum of money in most romantic and in its intricate meshes the police of this city and St. Petersburg still hope to find some trace of the two young men who were known to have occupied the compartment with the murdered men and are therefore believed to have had a hand in the killing.

Some months since a sensation was caused in local society by the imprisonment of a well-known young man whose parents were semi-noble, and through whose veins there pulsed a minimum of patrician blood that emanated from a king and came to him only slightly diluted.

ARRIVED AS A BRIGAND.

One night a great uproar was heard in a fashionable street with calls for the police and a general turmoil that bespoke the happening of an unusual event. The police hastened to the house from whence the cries came and there found a well-known member of the higher circles of the business community leaning forth from his window and shouting for help, while he held at arm's length a by no means desperate-looking intruder whom he claimed had broken into his house, was in the act of robbing him when he entered, and had been red-handed in the midst of his gathered plunder, with a bracelet of diamonds belonging to the lady of the house in his pocket and a variety of other spoils conveniently arranged for transport on a table.

The young man was hurried off to prison, and when arraigned gave a fictitious name that conveyed no intimation to the public of his true identity. This disguise he maintained until he was sentenced to five years in the State's prison, and was transported to and closed behind the bars of the most dreaded place in the entire Kingdom.

A MYSTERIOUS PRISONER.

Then it became rumored around that the young man's name was not such as he gave it all, but if it were known it would be found to duplicate that of one of the highest officials in the Emperor's household. And yet, as yet, no tangible connection with the now mysterious prisoner. Periodically paragraphs would appear in the paper suggesting that the veiled prisoner, as he came to be called, was of titled birth, or that he was possessed of great wealth, or that an effort was being made to secure his release, and was transported to and closed behind the bars of the most dreaded place in the entire Kingdom.

LOVE AND DEVOTION.

She admitted to being the wife of the well-known financier whose house had been invaded and whose treasure was stolen, and she had discovered the intruder and stranger making away with his jewels and his valuables. She said that she had been present at the time and from an adjoining room had listened to the outcries, and had been a witness in part of the sensational incidents that had followed.

White-House Improvements.

It has been reported that the new furnishings of the Blue Room in the White House cost $12,000. That is a mistake, as the entire appropriation for the year was but $25,000, and all the refurnishing, cleaning, and repairs that have been done during the past year were paid for out of that sum, and there still remains enough remaining to pay the expenses of running the Executive Mansion to the end of the fiscal year. The decorators left the Blue Room late on Saturday afternoon. It was quite dark when the last step-ladders were carried out of it, and to-day the workmen are employed upon the electric wires that are to light the room. The state reception-room has been rendered a most harmonious and beautiful apartment through the painstaking care of the artist who has been entrusted with the redecoration of the room, which looks out upon the principal thoroughfare. Here they passed hour after hour. The time fled with the unconscious rapidity of thought and before they were aware of it the sound of a key in the front door warned them that the busy had returned and it was now too late for retreat.

CATCH BY THE MURDER.

With the quick thought that is born of an emergency and great danger the young man pushed the lady into the adjoining room, and realizing from the approaching footsteps on the stairs the husband was rapidly approaching, he unlocked the door, opened a drawer of the dressing-case and seized the first jewel that came to hand. He cast out the precious bits of gold and gems that were concealed there and stood with the spoils in his hand awaiting the entrance of the husband.

RELEASED BY THE EMPEROR.

When the Emperor heard this tale that almost surpassed credulity, he was overwhelmed with surprise, and at once gave an order for the young man's release. There was an attempt to suppress the particulars of the case, and everything possible was done to spare the names of the parties concerned, and thus far it has been a great measure successful. The names are unknown, but the circumstances have become public property, and the honor of a man who would uncomplainingly accept an imprisonment of five years in order to spare the name of a lady was too precious to be exploited in the papers, and yet too creditable to escape public mention.

CLAIMS TO BE PAID.

But when the Emperor released the young man there were other claims to be satisfied as well. The husband, by the local laws, has an indemnity in such instances that even the complicity of the Emperor cannot override, and the prison authorities had other claims resulting from the prisoner and natural extravagance of the inmate that altogether footed up a tidy sum of 50,000 roubles.

It was this sum that the messengers were conveying from the bank, of which the young man's father is a director, to the place where the money was to be made, and the money was taken. It is known now that two fashionably-dressed young men entered the same compartment as that occupied by the messengers, and further, that they requested the guard to leave them undisturbed until the end of their journey.

STAYED TO DEATH.

They were, according to the description of the station official who noticed them, very dandy in appearance, dressed in the latest style and with the appearance of prosperous jeune homme rather than of murderous conspirators. These two travelers left at Alexandria and no trace of them has been found.
